SAISD LOVE STORIES

#SAISDLOVESTORY

Meet David & Suzy

I (David Sims '62) met Suzy Allen '61 at Horace Mann JHS. She was a "Lunchroom Monitor". She caught me "cutting in line" and made me get to the back of the line (several times). When I got to TJHS, she was my "Library Counselor" (Study Hall Monitor)". I had to get permission from her to go to the restroom, look for books, etc.! So, I ended up asking her to a dance early my sophomore year. We ended up getting married just after she graduated in June 1961. We have two daughters and seven grandkids. We've been married sixty years this June!

Happy Valentine's Day!

Valentine's Day may have passed, but love is in the air this month. Thank you to David Sims, Jefferson HS class of 1962, for sharing your SAISD love story!

Tafolla middle school teacher Beatriz Sena also shared her story, having met fiancé Cody, a fellow SAISD team member when she needed tech troubleshooting help in 2017. The rest is history!

Meet Beatriz & Cody

"I started my first year of teaching at Tafolla Middle School in the fall of 2017. I was teaching eighth grade English, and I was super nervous!

Despite everything I had learned in college, technology seemed to be a constant struggle. Luckily, our technology specialist Cody was able to help me with every issue.

The tech guy became my fiancé in 2018, and in April I'll be his wife! We are so blessed to consider Tafolla as the start of our love story"

AFRICAN AMERICAN STUDIES COURSE

Last year, when Tamiko Matthews (pictured at left in an East side mural) heard that the State Board of Education approved the creation of an African American Studies course, she wanted to be the one to teach it. And now, despite COVID-related struggles, she is teaching her second semester of African American Studies to 27 students at Brackenridge High School. It is now being offered as a social studies elective at Sam Houston High School and the Advanced Learning Academy, in addition to Brackenridge.
